MORE SPRING COLOURS IN ONGERUP'S MALLEE

Spring is not only the season for an immense wealth of colourful wildflowers in Ongerup's mallee. Last Friday, extra colour was added to pristine Malleefowl habitat on two private properties near Ongerup.

The captive Malleefowl at Ongerup's Yongergnow Australian Malleefowl Centre were extremely successful at reproducing in the last breeding season, and now is the time for the young birds to find a new home in their native bush.

All released birds are colour-banded, which means they wear two colourful 'bracelets' on each leg. Attached by a professional bander under the guidelines of the Australian Bird and Bat Banding Scheme, those bright additions do not disturb or hinder the birds in any way. Each bird has an individual colour code, and the bands will help provide information on each individual Malleefowl's lifestyle when birds are re-sighted in the future.. In spite of strict guidelines for the release properties, several landowners in the Ongerup area have offered to host Malleefowl on their properties.

More young Malleefowl will be released at Dryandra Woodland in cooperation with the Department of Biodiversity, Conservation and Attractions, and Yongergnow is negotiating options for releases of more young Malleefowl in National Parks, Nature Reserves and on private conservation properties.

Yongergnow's Chairman Jan Savage said: "The release project was born out of necessity; no-one expected our Malleefowl to breed so successfully. With a chick survival rate of 1 to 2 % in the wild, we did not expect so many surviving chicks from 38 eggs. And this season, there is another active mounds at Yongergnow..."

Yongergnow's consulting biologist Vicky Bilney said she really appreciated the wonderful volunteer support for the process of catching and banding the birds, and really enjoyed the eagerness of Ongerup's primary school students (and teachers!) to learn about bird banding.

Yongergnow is calling the public to report any sightings of Malleefowl, particularly of colour banded ones, to visitor@yongergnow.com.au or to fauna@dbca.wa.gov.au. The Yongergnow team are also working on a Facebook page for Malleefowl sightings.
