Malleefowl Monitor Training

Monitoring Malleefowl will not in itself save them, but it is an extremely important tool in understanding how the species is going. If there was a sudden crash in any population, we need to be aware of the situation ASAP. Annual monitoring is also essential if we are to understand long-term trends that may vary due to many factors including climate change.

Malleefowl exist right across Australia so we need to ensure everyone is monitoring in the same way. Over many years we have developed a method of monitoring Malleefowl that doesn't upset the birds, doesn't place more demands on the people doing the work than necessary and is scientifically robust.

We have developed a system that uses modern technology and is easy to use. Volunteers are supplied with smartphones with our own monitoring app installed.

At the training, we will show you how to use the equipment and then travel to a site where we will visit several mounds and go through the monitoring methodology.

Apart from learning how to take part in this important Citizen Science project, you will be mixing with lots of very knowledgeable Malleefowl people.

Saturday 10th
9.00 am
Yongerglow Malleefowl Centre
Jaekel St, Ongerup.

- Will have a short introduction and inductions
- Everyone gets to play with the app on our smartphones and learn how we use them in the field
- We will use GPS to navigate to Malleefowl mounds to record the data for each round
- At the mounds we will practice the best monitoring methods and how to use the smartphones

Sunday 11th

- For those that get bitten by the monitoring bug we will be going to other sites to continue monitoring

Note that we will be walking through sometimes heavy bush. Ensure that you have good walking shoes and clothing to protect yourself from scratching and sun...sounds fun doesn't it?

OCTOBER BOOK CLUB REVIEW.

SMALL GREAT THINGS BY JODI PICOULT.

Ruth Jefferson is a labor and delivery nurse at a Connecticut hospital with more than twenty years' experience. During her shift, Ruth begins a routine checkup on a newborn, only to be told a few minutes later that she's been reassigned to another patient. The parents are white supremacists and don't want Ruth, who is African American, to touch their child. The hospital complies with their request, but the next day, the baby goes into cardiac distress while Ruth is alone in the nursery. Does she obey orders or does she intervene?

Ruth hesitates before performing CPR and, as a result, is charged with a serious crime. Kennedy McQuarrie, a white public defender, takes her case but gives unexpected advice: Kennedy insists that mentioning race in the courtroom is not a winning strategy. Conflicted by Kennedy's counsel, Ruth tries to keep life as normal as possible for her family—especially her teenage son—as the case becomes a media sensation. As the trial moves forward, Ruth and Kennedy must gain each other's trust, and come to see that what they've been taught their whole lives about others—and themselves—might be wrong.

With incredible empathy, intelligence, and candor, Jodi Picoult tackles race, privilege, prejudice, justice, and compassion—and doesn't offer easy answers. Small Great Things is a remarkable achievement from a writer at the top of her game.

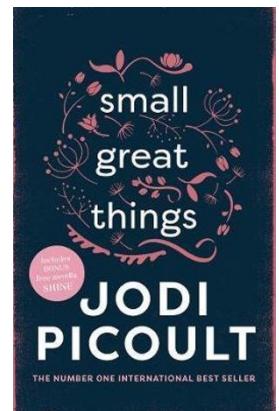

Last Monday night 7 of us gathered at Leanne's house, a week later than usual as Leanne had not been well.

After our usual catch up on the happenings of the world we got down to reviewing the book. We had all read the book. We all enjoyed it and found it one of the best Jodi Picoult that we had read.

We thought that the end was too neat and tidy and life is not like that. The book gave us a lot of discussion on how hard it was not to have some prejudices.

This book rated quite high mostly 8/10.

Next Month is Jill Baileys choice and she has asked the Jerramungup girls to join us so we are starting at 7 p.m. instead of 8p.m. on the 12th of November. Leanne provided a lovely supper as usual.
