ONGERUP BOWLING CLUB Would you believe the weather in Ongerup! a few weeks ago we cancelled the Ladies club singles championship because of the Heat Rule, we've now played this game on Wednesday this week with jumpers on and changing wind gusts all day! But it's congratulations to Michelle Bamess for taking out the top award & Robyn Hams runner up. Then for the rest of us well - we had a great day! Thanks for the support of Mog for umpiring all day & George for his attempt to roll the green for us. Now its best of luck to Michelle in the League single championship playoff here in Ongerup this Saturday.

It's also congrats to our Zone Ladies who played in the big time inter-zone at Emu Point last weekend, they came runners up for the weekend. This weekend we have the Men's last game of pennants, it's against Jerramungup and they are in need of the win to keep them off the bottom of the Ladder. Then there a few teams going out to Jerry on Sunday to take part in their Mixed Pairs event, and our men have 2 teams of 4 going to Country week starting next Frid 3rd.

DEATH: Harry Hughes passed away in Boyup Brook at the ripe old age of 83. A shearer of legendary status, he came from NZ to Australia then to Ongerup in 1972 and shone in many local sheds and competitions around the state especially the famous Ongerup Shears! Allan Faulkner shone with Harry when he first came to Ongerup in WA in 1972, he had a lot of natural talent and loved a challenge, which saw him shear a sheep blindfolded, and sitting on a milk crate!! Allan had the pleasure of spending an hour chatting with Harry last Tuesday.

Condolences to son Stephen and family.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

12th March 2022

at Point Ann

Geologist – Katy Evans

Geology of the Fitzgerald Biosphere: What we know, what we don't know, and how we know what we know.

The staggering beauty and unique flora of the Fitzgerald Biosphere are rooted firmly by the underlying geology, which shows equivalent diversity and unique characteristics to those of the more ephemeral but obvious features of the geomorphology, flora, and fauna.

The geological history of the Fitzgerald Biosphere began very early in Earth's history; the Archaean ended over half the age of the Earth ago, but crystals from that time are preserved within rocks now exposed within the Fitzgerald Biosphere, where they record processes on ancient continental margins that were very different to those that operate today.

As the continental margin evolved over the next billion years or so, sediments were deposited, buried, and metamorphosed at high pressures and temperatures as the tectonic plates advanced, retreated, and rotated, in a slow but elegant dance that is reflected by some of the most striking units within the Fitzgerald Biosphere, such as the Kundip Quartzite. Rocks that were originally igneous, such as those at Fisheries Beach, intruded the sedimentary rocks and were metamorphosed to form charnockites, a rock type that is still enigmatic and controversial even today after decades of study.

Much more recently, only a few tens of millions of years ago, parts of the Fitzgerald Biosphere formed the basement to sediments deposited both on-shore and beneath a shallow sea. Units such as the Pallinup siltstone, which includes the spongolite unit and numerous other fossils, record warm open waters and a detailed record of these times is provided by deeply incised valleys that cut these rocks.

Given this extensive history, it is hardly surprising that the landscape is so complex and diverse. What is surprising is that it is so little studied; many secrets remain unrevealed, not least the functional relationships between flora, fauna, and geology, that sustain the landscape.

Introducing

Biography: Katy Evans completed her degree and PhD at Cambridge in the UK, then worked on the formation and longevity of acid mine drainage before coming to Australia in 2002. She migrated gradually from Melbourne to Canberra to Perth, where she has undertaken teaching and research at Curtin University since 2007. More recently, her long-standing love of the Great Southern led her to Lowlands, between Albany and Denmark, where she attempts to balance the joys of geological research and teaching with building a strawbale house and the practicalities of managing a small property.
