ONGERUP BOWLING CLUB NOTES

The Ongerup bowls club has been quite active since the New Year. We started with our annual mixed triples event in January, at which 16 teams of 3 took part, the day was all kindly sponsored by Great Southern Seed Cleaning. Karl Pass & Associates. Stirling Ag - Nutrien Ag Solutions. Kurana farming. Jock & Judy Kerse-contractors. Swat Pest control. Ongerup Tyres & Auto. Ongerup Hotel. Farmers Centre - Albany & Jerramungup Electrical. Last week-end we held our club singles championships, the Ladies held a round robin comp and Jade O'Neill, is our Ladies champ. The men had a good field of 12 so their event was a knock-out competition, George Johnson is the Men's champ, with George Hams winning the Plate playoff. Congrats to all, it was a great competition. There has been some pennant games, with more to come this month. Mog, Jared & Jake represented our club in the inter league fours early in January. This Sunday the Ladies are hosting the League fours championship here in Ongerup. Then ladies are off to play in the ILRR at Middleton Beach. Scroungers is still happening on Friday nights, names in by 6pm at the clubhouse and anyone is welcome to come and have a roll.

Population and seed bank dynamics of the serotinous shrub, Hakea victoria by Tasmin Lancaster

Fire is a natural component of global landscapes, with recent studies confirming fire as an important major disturbance in shaping traits of the World's flora. Much of the Australian flora has evolved to be fire-adapted, forming traits such as protection of sensitive tissues and resprouting, serotiny, heat and smoke-cued germination and fire stimulated flowering. The size and vigour of plant populations, are dependent on the biological attributes associated with a species life stages, including time to maturation, seed production, and seed viability. These attributes have been shaped through evolution by fire events and fundamentally influence the probability of a population's survival of fire and subsequent recruitment. In this regard, the more we understand about each life stage of fire-sensitive vegetation (e.g. species where plant death occurs by fire before re-establishing from a seed bank) the better we are able to predict a species response to changing fire regimes and guide fire management practices to protect our native flora.

Hakea victoria (royal hakea), endemic to the Fitzgerald River National Park in south-west Australia, is a serotinous non-resprouter, that regenerates from seeds stored within woody fruits and released after fire. Most woody-fruited Proteaceae retain their seed for an average of five or more years, progressively accumulating seed with successive reproductive events. High seed production is particularly important for non-resprouters, which rely solely on the survival of their seed for post-fire recovery. Seed-release is often caused by fire that results in plant death, with subsequent recruitment maximised when seed release follows fire. Consequently, fire frequency is likely to be a critical factor in determining the survival of Hakea victoria. Too frequent fire prevents plant maturation and therefore seed production, and very low fire frequency potentially limits recruitment opportunities and increases the risk of seed bank degradation (e.g., granivory, fungal infection, reduced seed viability).

Relatively little is published on Hakea victoria, which reduces the likelihood that current fire management practices will be appropriate for the species. This project aims to identify the age, reproductive maturity and rate of inter-fire recruitment of Hakea victoria to help determine the highest probability of population persistence following fire, by analysing life stages including seed production and seed viability over time. In my presentation I will discuss the approaches used, progress to date and offer an overview of early findings.
