There is something for everyone in this week's book selection –sport, biography, travel, history, and analysis.

Deal maker : the secret world of AFL recruiting and trading by Scott Clayton. Scott has been in the AFL industry for 40 years and has been a recruiting manager for over 30 years. Deal Maker takes us behind the scenes to look at some of the AFL's biggest trades and what it takes to find the right players.

Drives a bit funny : a life [and fast times] in cars by Stephen Corby. Australia's motoring journalist, Stephen Corby is our Jeremy Clarkson - just a bit younger, funnier and less pompous. Drives a Bit Funny is part-memoir, part stories from a car-obsessive. It's a collection of hilarious, self-deprecating, poignant and heartwarming stories that cover Stephen's life in cars: from the battered Land Rover that his grandfather taught him to drive in to the humble Holden Astra he had to buy when his first kid came along.

Explore Australia 2027 : Australia's essential travel guide by Narrelle M Harris. Explore Australia 2027 is the perfect companion for any travellers, for holidayers looking for weekend getaway to cross-country explorers hitting the road. Within these pages, you'll find the very best coastal escapes, city hot spots, rural gems and natural wonders that Australia has to offer.

100 ways I almost died by Bram Connolly. For more than two decades, Bram Connolly's life was a relentless march through some of the world's most volatile landscapes, brutal conflicts and extreme training. Serving in the Australian Army and the elite Commando Regiment, he took part in dozens of high risk operations - including counter terrorism missions - each marked by close calls and narrow escapes.

Seize the moment : Australia's real opportunities in an unstable world by Bernard Keane. Australia is surviving the second coming of Trump, but our economy and our social cohesion are under pressure, and our political landscape is being reshaped. How do we turn this time of international crisis into a launchpad for success? Bernard Keane draws on his experience within government and as a political commentator to outline how Australia can prosper in the next quarter century.
